PROCEDURAL FACTORS

The Panel is satisfied that all procedural requirements under UDRP were met and there is no other reason why it would be inappropriate to provide a decision.

PRINCIPAL REASONS FOR THE DECISION

Identical or confusingly similar

The Complainant contends that the disputed domain name <www.majedestyle.com> is confusingly similar to the Complainant's trademark MAJE, which was chosen by the owner of the brand Judith Milgram to represent initials of first names of her loved ones. The disputed domain name incorporates in full the MAJE trademark, which has no other meanings in modern English, and is followed by a descriptive phrase "destyle", which suggests the domain name's association with the Complainant's brand. Since MAJE is in the industry of women's fashion items, the added description "destyle" does not change the nature of the business that the brand is in, and is likely to cause consumer confusion that the disputed domain name is related to the brand of the Complainant.

Like the Complainant suggests, it is well accepted that where the relevant trademark is recognizable within the disputed domain name, the addition of descriptive terms would not prevent a finding of confusing similarity. The presence of the TLD suffix "com" does not change the analysis. Usually, a domain name wholly incorporates a complainant's registered trademark is already sufficient to establish identify or confusing similarity within the meaning of the Policy, and the Complainant has cited numerous cases to buttress its argument.

The Panel therefore concludes that the disputed domain name is confusingly similar to a trademark in which the Complainant has rights within the meaning of paragraph 4(a)(i) of the Policy.

2. No rights or legitimate interests

Although the Respondent did not file an administratively compliant (or any) response, the Complainant is still required to make out a prima facie case that the Respondent lacks rights or legitimate interests. Once such prima facie case is made, the Respondent carries the burden of demonstrating rights or legitimate interests in the domain name. If the Respondent fails to do so, the Complainant is deemed to have satisfied paragraph 4(a)(ii) of the Policy.

In this case, because the registrant has used a proxy service in registering the domain name, additional information of the registrant needs to be discovered. The uncovered identity of the registrant, an individual named “Ren Mei” seems to have no connection with the Complainant’s brand. The Complainant contends that no evidence suggests that the Respondent has been known in any way by the disputed domain name or by the distinctive part “MAJE”. The Complainant did not grant any license or authorization to the Respondent to register or use the disputed domain name, nor the use of the Complainant’s trademark on every page of the disputed website. Before the dispute, the Respondent also has not used the disputed domain name or a name corresponding to the disputed domain name in connection with a bona fide offering of goods or services.

On the basis of preponderance of evidence, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary or any administratively compliant response being put forward by the Respondent, the Panel finds that the Respondent does not have rights or legitimate interests in the disputed domain name within the meaning of paragraph 4(a)(ii) of the Policy.

3. Bad faith

By trying to establish the bad faith element of paragraph 4(a) of the Policy, the Complainant has primarily attempted to rely on paragraph 4(b)(i) and 4(b)(iv) of the Policy.

As contended by the Complainant, it is true that UDRP Panels have consistently held that the mere registration of a domain name that is confusingly similar to a famous or widely-known trademark by an unaffiliated entity can by itself create a presumption of bad faith. However, many instances here have collectively pointed to the conclusion in this case that the disputed domain name has been registered and used in the way attempting to attract for commercial gains by creating a likelihood of confusion with the complainant’s trademark. The Respondent never had bona fide business establishments related to the contents of its website. Moreover, it listed the Complainant’s well-known trademark on its website without the authorization of the Complainant, attempting to derive potential traffic for its own website, in addition to commercial gains. In addition, based on screenshots of the website that the disputed domain name resolves to, the website seems to have misled internet users and consumers for commercial gains into thinking that the website belongs to the “MAJE” brand owner.

Many instances have collected point to the conclusion that the domain name has been registered and is being used in bad faith. Like the Complainant contended here, the Respondent was clearly aware of the existence of the Complainant’s brand at the time of registering the domain name, has no bona fide business establishments related to the contents of the website, tries to use the Complainant’s readily established trademark to derive commercial gains for itself, etc.

Therefore, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary (or any administratively compliant response) being put forward by the Respondent, the Panel determines that the disputed domain name was registered and is being used in bad faith within the meaning of paragraph 4(a)(iii) of the Policy.
